

Counseling Recreation & School Psychology/CASE Department

The Department of Counseling, Recreation, and School Psychology offers undergraduate- and graduate-level programs and courses for students aspiring to become transformative leaders in a range of organizational settings, such as schools, mental health agencies, rehabilitation facilities, hospitals, athletic centers, and sport organizations. Academic preparation focuses on five key areas: counselor education, rehabilitation and recreational therapy, research design and analysis, school psychology, and sport and recreation management. Additionally, the department provides the core curricula in the psychological foundations of education, research methodology, measurement, and evaluation.

Faculty are recognized as national and international scholars, exemplifying outstanding teaching practices. They are dedicated to maximizing student learning, engaging in the discovery and dissemination of new knowledge, and fostering a creative and innovative spirit among students. Faculty also are committed to taking leadership roles in professional service and community engagement. Community engagement is pivotal to these programs and sponsored research projects, where faculty and students identify and address critical problems confronting communities.

The department's philosophy is grounded in the following principles:

- Student-centered learning
- Evidence-based research
- High expectations
- Collaboration, community, and engagement
- Excellence and continuous improvement
- Ethical and critical thinking
